About Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macau Greater Bay Area

Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macao Greater Bay Area is in southern China. Covering the country's most open and economically vibrant region, it consists of 9 cities and 2 special administrative regions in south China. In 2017, it added US$17.5 trillion (HK$1.27 trillion) to the Chinese economy, accounting for 12 percent of the national GDP despite only representing less than 1% of the country’s total land area and less than 5% of the total population.

The Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macao Greater Bay Area has a unique advantage in which cities in the area are inter-complementary and can form a complete and integrated industrial chain for technological innovation.

China aims to develop a world-class airport cluster in the Greater Bay Area. Existing airports will expand to increase their capacities and transport links are also to be improved. The volume of air freight traffic in the Greater Bay Area was 7.76 million tonnes in 2017, greater than the combined volume of San Francisco, New York and Tokyo.

Some of the world’s busiest container harbors are in Greater Bay Area, with Shenzhen, Guangzhou and Hong Kong ranked in the world’s top 10 container ports.
